ANN ARBOR, Mich., November 22, 2010—The Tax & Accounting business of Thomson Reuters recently marked the 2,500th download of its Mobile CS smartphone app introduced at the 30th annual User's Conference, October 27-30. The first mobile application designed specifically for tax and accounting professionals, Mobile CS gives Practice CS users access to key firm and client data anytime, anywhere on a variety of Apple mobile devices including the iPhone and the iPad.

The high demand for Mobile CS shows a move toward more individualized technology and a shift to greater reliance on cloud and mobile computing services according to Scott Fleszar, vice president of Strategic Marketing for the Tax & Accounting business of Thomson Reuters.

“Firms are adopting Mobile CS quickly, which speaks to the changing expectations in the tax and accounting profession,” he said. “Accounting firms and their clients are already using iPhones, iPads, and other mobile devices to access data 24/7. So, we’ve taken advantage of mobile technology to extend the reach of our products in the way professionals like to access information today.”

The initial release of Mobile CS provides mobile access to a variety of content from Practice CS, the comprehensive practice management software from Thomson Reuters. Information available in Mobile CS includes client data, staff availability, project status, and key firm data including WIP and AR, all in a convenient, mobile-friendly format. Future Mobile CS releases will offer access to additional CS Professional Suite application data.
