In a communication sent to the software vendor's business partner community, Tom Miller, Sage VP of Channel Management, has announced that Sue Swenson will be retiring from her role as CEO of Sage Software effective March 31. Pascal Houillon has been selected to fill that position thereafter. Swenson's departure was planned and had been previously made public, although the specific date had not been disclosed until now.

Houillon has been CEO of Sage France since 1997 and in 2005 also took on responsibility for Sage in Belgium, Brazil, Switzerland, and Morocco. Mr. Houillon started his career as a systems analyst for UAP insurance and in 1987 he co-founded Sinequanon, a company that provided business management solutions to SMEs. He joined Sage in 1989 in sales and held a number of management positions as a regional director and sales director before leading the Sybel business when it was acquired by Sage in 1995. For nine years Mr. Houillon was vice president of Syntec, the French software and IT association.

"We say goodbye to Sue with gratitude for her leadership during one of the most difficult economic periods in recent memory," Miller said. "And we welcome Pascal, who joins Sage North America with a strong track record of business growth and knowledge of the industry, which makes him well-placed to lead Sage North America into the next chapter."
