Productivity, Performance & Profitability: Where Does Your Firm Stand?

May. 18, 2011

The Productivity Survey

Sponsored by Thomson Reuters

According to the latest professional survey of firms of all sizes, the average compensated hours among principals in top-performing firms is about three percent less. That's an extra week of vacation each year. This same survey shows that those top-performing firms even earn about 60 percent more than the average firm. So how do they do it? They've discovered how to reach their peak performance.* Take the survey now!

Productivity

The Productivity Survey.v2 includes a series of updated questions to measure your firm's productivity and adoption of technology. Questions relate to professional practice standards, office processes, workflow, client communications, paperless office technologies, connectivity and general technology utilization.

Performance

Each firm completing the Productivity Survey v.2 receives its own individualized
