Small businesses and service providers in Canada will soon be able to accept credit card payments using Intuit's GoPayment app on their iPhone, iPad, or iPod touch devices.

Launching GoPayment in Canada is the first step in Intuit's plan to distribute their credit card app globally. This will be the first mobile payment option available in Canada that does not have any start-up or equipment costs, long-term contracts or monthly fees. Users will only pay a small fee for each transaction.

GoPayment allows users to quickly ring up sales by creating and selling from a list of frequently sold items right on their mobile device. It quickly processes the payment while keeping credit card data secure. Customers can also sign to approve the transactions and request a receipt by text or email with a map of where the purchase took place.

Additionally, new users in Canada and the U.S. will receive a free, newly-designed GoPayment card reader. The updated card reader is a compact, cylinder-shaped device that attaches to the audio jack of most iOS and Android devices. It has a silicone sleeve that fits over the phone or tablet, increasing the accuracy of each
