free and easy-to-use "Find a CPA" directory allows individuals, businesses and not-for-profit organizations to do a simple search through a database of member CPAs.

Nov. 12, 2012

Taxes are complicated for many filers, and even filers generally simple income scenarios often run into challenges. Playing guessing games when filing taxes isn't a good idea.

For these individuals and small businesses, the Illinois CPA Society has made finding a trusted tax professional easy. Their new free and easy-to-use "Find a CPA" directory allows individuals, businesses and not-for-profit organizations to do a simple search through a database of member CPAs. Your search can be narrowed down by location, the type of services needed, industries served and language preference.

The system also has a "Quick Search" to find a CPA who prepares individual income tax returns or one who works with non-profit organizations. The "Find a CPA" Directory section also includes helpful information on how to choose and use a CPA.

As the end of the year grows closer, so does the uncertainty surrounding the "fiscal cliff" and tax planning for the future. A wide array of tax credits and cuts, which were mostly enacted during President Bush's administration, are set expire December 31, 2012, unless Congress takes action soon.

Although not a done deal, the scheduled expiration of these credits and breaks could wreak havoc on your finances. Planning is imperative and working with a CPA can help you better understand your available options for preparation.

To search the free "Find a CPA" directory, go to www.icpas.org or contact Michele Haryasz, the Society's Director of Knowledge Management at 800-993-0407.
