to pay an average of $261 for an itemized Form 1040 with Schedule A and a state tax return, according to the National Society of Accountants (NSA).

Isaac M. O'Bannon • Dec. 12, 2013

Both tax professionals and taxpayers should be interested in the most recent survey data from the National Society of Accountants, which offers insight into the average fees charged for preparation and filing of common IRS forms for individuals and business entities.

The fees that tax professionals charge for preparation of individual and business income tax returns vary widely based on many factors, of course, most notably the type of tax return (individual or various business type), as well as the geographical location of the tax professional.

The overall average across the U.S., however, is that taxpayers using a professional to prepare and file their 2013 tax return can expect to pay an average of $261 for an itemized Form 1040 with Schedule A and one state tax return, according to the survey.

“The IRS says it takes an average of four hours just to complete and submit a Form 1040,” says NSA Executive Vice President John Ams. “Add at least another hour if you also have to complete a state return. You have to ask, ‘How much is my time worth?’ Plus I haven’t met many people who enjoy preparing their taxes, so hiring a professional to prepare your tax return can take a very unpleasant task off your plate. That’s worth something.”

Ams added that tax preparers make it their business to keep up with tax law changes. “If a professional tax preparer can catch even one deduction or credit you may have missed, that can easily pay for the fee.”

Fees for non-itemized returns are also low – the average cost to prepare a Form 1040

All fees assume a taxpayer has gathered and organized all necessary information.

Taxpayers should also make sure they provide information on time to avoid additional fees. Some will charge an average fee of $44 to file an extension, an average fee of $78 to expedite a return, and an average fee of $85 if information is not provided by 15 days in advance of a filing deadline.
