through Bill.com training.

Dec. 05, 2014

Bill.com, a provider of small business payment management technologies, has announced that its clients can now earn continuing professional education credits through Bill.com training.

Starting immediately, practitioners can complete the Expert Certification course offered through the Bill.com console and receive up to 7.0 CPE credits in computer science. The course is offered at no charge to Console customers, and no prerequisites or advanced preparation is needed. Upon successful completion of the course, participants will be emailed their certificate within two business days.

To get started, customers should sign up for the Bill.com console, navigate to the training tab and select Expert Certification.

"Successful practitioners know that accounting technology can offer a multitude of benefits for their practices and their clients. We want to ensure they have the training and subsequent CPEs available to support their growth," said Geraldine
