The American Institute of CPAs \(AICPA\) and the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants \(CIMA\) have launched a new professional learning and development website for Chartered Global Management Accountants \(CGMAs\) designed to equip them with the competencies required to maintain and improve their employability in today's challenging business environment.

The AICPA | CIMA Competency and Learning website features more than 1,500 articles, publications, videos, webcasts and self-study courses to support lifelong learning for CGMA designation holders, helping them to sustain a competitive advantage. Based on the CGMA Competency Framework, which was created in consultation with employers across the world to define the technical, business, people and leadership skills necessary today and into the future, the website identifies the knowledge demanded by employers in an increasingly fast-paced and intricate business world. CGMAs can recognize gaps in their learning using the site's self-assessment tool and develop their competence from foundational levels to expert.

The website also provides flexible access to all of its learning resources, allowing CGMAs to discover and develop new competencies when, where and how they want. CGMAs can easily track and report progress toward their personal, professional and regulatory goals, allowing them to take control of their career development.

"Yesterday's knowledge will not reveal tomorrow's opportunities," said Arleen Thomas, CPA, CGMA, the AICPA's senior vice president for management accounting and global markets. “The future belongs to those businesses that are able to quickly
