Technology and Life Science Industry Practice to Austin, TX. The local practice builds on the firm's longstanding relationship with private and public technology, new media, and life

Feb. 23, 2015

The national accounting firm CohnReznick announced the expansion of its Technology and Life Science Industry Practice to Austin, TX. The local practice builds on the firm's longstanding relationship with private and public technology, new media, and life sciences companies and industry investors, including private equity and venture capital firms.

Led by Christopher Thomas, CPA, a CohnReznick partner in the Austin office, the practice includes a combination of local and national professionals who will provide accounting, tax, and advisory services to technology and life sciences companies in the Austin area. "I am very excited to be taking the lead on this initiative and we look forward to making a positive impact, not only on the local tech and life sciences markets, but on the Austin community as a whole," said Thomas.

"The Austin technology and life sciences markets are expanding at an incredible pace as innovation continues to fuel existing companies and spawn new growth. We are excited to be active participants in the Austin technology and life sciences ecosystems and believe that we can contribute our experience and expertise to emerging growth companies in this market to help them grow and achieve their goals," said Alex Castelli, a CohnReznick partner and the Firm's Technology and Life Science Industry Practice Leader. "Our focus on entrepreneurs and middle market companies will allow us to bring additional insight and support to the Austin marketplace."

CohnReznick's Technology and Life Sciences Industry Practice helps private and public technology and life sciences companies succeed at each stage of their life cycle.
