and fees for earning the degree. Only institutions with accounting accreditation from Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business were considered for the rankings.

Mar. 03, 2015

Going back to school to complete a degree or earn a higher degree can be challenging, particularly when a mid-career professional has the responsibilities or work and family. And then there's the cost.

Accounting Degree Review (www.accounting-degree.org), has released its 2015 affordability rankings for residential master's degrees in accounting from U.S. schools. The rankings consist of the top 30 most affordable programs based on the tuition and fees for earning the degree. Accounting Degree Review is an accounting resource website about higher education and related topics.

The tuition and fees were calculated for an out-of-state full-time student with a bachelor's degree in accounting who started the program in Fall 2014.

Only the 170 U.S. institutions with accounting accreditation from Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB) were considered by Accounting Degree Review for the rankings. The publication restricted its research to these schools because AACSB accounting accreditation is the best programmatic accreditation for accounting programs worldwide.

"While many students are familiar with AACSB accreditation for business programs and the prestige that comes with it, accounting students often do not know that AACSB also accredits accounting programs with a separate accreditation," commented Dee Barizo, Accounting Degree Review editor. "We chose to look only at programs with this accreditation to add quality control to our rankings. It's telling that only 170 schools in the nation have this type of accreditation. These schools
