

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us field, basketball court, or baseball diamond, is clearly defined and understood by all athletes who play the game. It is pretty easy to ascertain whether you are ...

Jul. 27, 2016

Almost every sport uses a defined boundary. The playing area, whether it is a football field, basketball court, or baseball diamond, is clearly defined and understood by all athletes who play the game. It is pretty easy to ascertain whether you are in or out of bounds. It's not so simple in the accounting world. Consider these examples:

- A large accounting firm had to resign from an audit engagement because a

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

- A wealthy individual tax client of a midsize CPA firm sold his business, which resulted in negative tax consequences. The client alleged that the firm failed to give him proper tax advice regarding the sale and brought a claim against the firm. The CPA firm indicated the engagement was for tax return preparation services only, as documented in the engagement letter. However, it acknowledged discussing the sale as a courtesy to the client.

Whether it is termed scope creep or engagement creep, it can be challenging to stay within the boundaries of an agreed-upon scope when delivering client services.

WHAT'S THE BIG DEAL?

Professional liability concerns

A significant number of claims asserted against CPA firms in the AICPA Professional Liability Insurance Program include allegations related to a disputed engagement scope. Even if a scope dispute is not expressly alleged, defending a claim can be challenging if the firm's activities were not in line with the scope described in the engagement letter (if an engagement letter even existed). Often, the scope of service is inadvertently expanded by a well-intentioned CPA trying to deliver good client service. Perhaps the client asked the CPA to "quickly look into something" or wanted to "bounce something off" the CPA. Or, during the performance of services, the CPA realized that additional services, such as bank reconciliation cleanup or the preparation of an additional state tax return, were needed. Acting upon these good intentions may place additional obligations on the CPA, which may be challenged by a plaintiff attorney in the event of a professional liability claim.

Financial concerns

Often a CPA completes an engagement, reviews the client's unbilled fee balance, and

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us time spent debating with the client, the aggravation caused by these misunderstandings, and potential reputational damage that may be caused by an unhappy client. These costs exist even if a claim is not asserted.

RISK MANAGEMENT TIPS

To help stay in bounds, consider the following tips:

- Be mindful of whom you let play in your league. Perform proper client acceptance procedures. Take on only those clients that are a fit with the firm. Be sure to evaluate all potential new clients, including those who seek the firm's services or come from an acquired firm or practice.
- Have a game plan. Use an engagement letter for all services. The scope section of an engagement letter is critical when a professional liability claim arises. Scope of work should be clear, and the boundaries of the service to be performed should be well-defined. Clarify any limitations of the services. Identify aspects that will not be included, if appropriate. Include a statement indicating that if additional services are needed, written client approval will be required, and additional fees will be charged.
- Ensure everyone understands the rules. Communicate the scope to all client service team members, particularly those who perform services on-site at the client's location, to ensure everyone knows the boundaries of the services. Consider providing a refresher to teams on long-term engagements. Clarify client understanding of what is included in the scope of services. Strengthening these communications will help mitigate the risk of unintended scope creep.
- Stick to the game plan. Deliver services in accordance with the scope outlined in the engagement letter, and document work performed in engagement workpapers. Well-documented workpapers provide evidence of services delivered and assist in the defense of claims related to scope disputes. In addition, billing records, particularly the narrative included on client invoices, should align with the

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

- engagement letter amendments, or a new engagement letter.
- Know when to make cuts. A client who consistently asks for “quick favors,” balks at engagement letters or additional fees, or pushes the boundaries of the engagement’s scope might be taking advantage of the firm’s commitment to client service. Not only does this type of client increase the firm’s professional liability risk, it is likely to result in poor realization for the firm. Consider cutting this client from the firm’s roster.

Sarah Beckett Ference (sarah.ference@cna.com) is a risk control director at CNA.

Continental Casualty Co., one of the CNA insurance companies, is the underwriter of the AICPA Professional Liability Insurance Program. Aon Insurance Services, the National Program Administrator for the AICPA Professional Liability Program, is available at 800-221-3023 or visit cpai.com.

This article provides information, rather than advice or opinion. It is accurate to the best of the author’s knowledge as of the article date. This article should not be viewed as a substitute for recommendations of a retained professional. Such consultation is recommended in applying this material in any particular factual situations.

Examples are for illustrative purposes only and not intended to establish any standards of care, serve as legal advice, or acknowledge any given factual situation is covered under any CNA insurance policy. The relevant insurance policy provides actual terms, coverages, amounts, conditions, and exclusions for an insured. All products and services may not be available in all states and may be subject to change without notice.

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us