tapped by Donald Trump for an unspecified position within the incoming U.S. president's administration.

Jan. 19, 2017

Chris Liddell, the chairman of online small business accounting maker Xero, has been tapped by Donald Trump as “assistant to the president and director of strategic initiatives” within the incoming U.S. president’s administration.

Xero is based in New Zealand but has a noteworthy presence in the U.S. and around the world. Graham Smith, the current director of the company, will replace Liddell as chairman. The change will be effective January 20.
