

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us employment laws are creating major compliance requirements for businesses. Currently 5 cities and 1 state have passed some form of a scheduling law.

Nov. 02, 2017

From the [SwipeClock blog.]

Sometimes called secure scheduling, fair scheduling, or restrictive scheduling, new employment laws are creating major compliance requirements for businesses. Currently 5 cities and 1 state have passed some form of a scheduling law.

Current Fair or Advanced Scheduling Law

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

- Requires penalty pay for additional, reduced, or changed hours
- Prohibits discrimination against part time employees
- San Jose's Opportunity to Work, effective March 13, 2017
 - 36+ employees
 - New/additional hours must be offered to existing employees with 36 hours to respond
- Emeryville's Fair Work Week, effective July 1, 2017
 - City council announced a "soft launch" of Jan 1, 2018
 - Non exempt employees or fast food and retail chains
 - Good faith estimate of work prior to hiring
 - Compensation for schedule changes
 - New hours offered to existing employees
- Seattle's Secure Scheduling, effective July 1, 2017
 - Non-exempt employees of fast food and retail employers with 500+ employees worldwide
 - Private right of action can result in "treble damages" and penalties
- New York City's Fair Work Week, effective November 26, 2017
 - Five total ordinances
 - Retail and fast food employees
- Oregon's Fair Work Week, effective July 1, 2018 with phasing
 - Large employers 500+ employees
 - Retail trade, Hotels, Motels, & Food services
- Washington D.C. Building Service Employees Act requires that building service workers be given at least 30 hours a week. Employers can reserve up to 20% of the total work for part time employees. Part time employees must be given at least 20 hours of work scheduled in 4 hours minimum blocks.
- New Hampshire's Relative to Flexible Working Arrangements in Employment isn't a full scheduling law, but is typically included in scheduling laws. The law protects employees who ask for flexibility in their working schedules

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

the ordinance's biggest supporter, the mayor, pulled support for the ordinance. The proposed ordinance required 4 weeks notice for schedules. Employees would have received 1 hour of premium pay for every change made to the schedule and 4 hours of premium pay for every change made with less than 24 hours notice. The proposed ordinance would have covered all businesses within the city.

- California State tried in 2015 to pass its "Fair Scheduling and Pay Act" The act would have applied to fast food and retail establishments. It also provided premium pay for schedule changes. After it failed to pass, in 2017, California legislatures introduced the "Right to Work Act" which requires that employers first offer additional hours or shifts to existing employees before hiring temporary or additional employees. The proposed act is more strict than San Jose's as it applied to all businesses with 10+ employees instead of the 35 that San Jose targets. In addition the state act does not provide any exceptions for employers while San Jose does.
- Connecticut Act Concerning Predictable Scheduling failed to pass in 2015. It would have required at least 21 days notice before schedules were effective and required between 1 and 4 hours of premium pay for any changes made, depending on the amount of notice given.
- Illinois also proposed a secure scheduling law, which failed to pass in 2015. It required employers to interact with employees in a "good faith interactive process" and allowed employees to request changes to their schedules, hours and schedule changes. Employers would have to state in writing the reasons for their decisions and consider alternatives to employee requests.
- Chicago is currently reviewing a fair workweek ordinance that will require advanced notice of schedules, premium pay for changes, additional hours to be offered to existing employees, and other part time employee rights.
- Maryland proposed a fair scheduling act in 2015 which failed to pass. The act would have required 21 days notice for all schedules and matched much of what San Francisco's Bill of Rights provided employees.

- Massachusetts House of Representatives sponsored two bills in 2015. Although they

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

...and other related education programs, but also would have required premium pay for cancelled or split shifts.

- New Jersey legislature looked at two bills that would have allowed employees to set change their work schedules and take off an additional 40 hours a year for school events. Employers who didn't comply could have been sued by employees per both laws. A slightly more employer friendly scheduling bill was reintroduced in 2016. Employees would have been able to request schedule changes due to serious health conditions (likely already covered under FMLA), responsibilities as a health care giver, educational commitments, and obligations to a secondary employer. The New Jersey Schedules that Work have been introduced to the legislature every year since 2015.
- New York State is currently reviewing regulations that would create scheduling requirements for all minimum wage employers. The state has looked at scheduling laws since 2015 and recently passed a family leave law. It is also possible that the state rules would preempt the recent New York City Scheduling Ordinances.
- Rhode Island lawmakers have spoken about creating laws that would mandate employees schedules and create predictable pay for employees. However, no such bills have been introduced for the 2017-2018 session yet.
- Washington DC passed a scheduling law that affected specifically building maintenance employees. The Building Service Employees Minimum Work Week Act was passed in 2016 and requires minimum weekly hours of 30 hours and 20 hours for part time employees.
- If at First You Don't Succeed...

Advocates of secure scheduling bills and other employee rights laws will continue to push advanced scheduling laws on a local and a state level.

Even states with preemption laws that restrict local cities and towns from passing scheduling laws may see such a law on the state level.

For example, Arizona passes a preemptive sick leave law, which was quickly followed

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us and their growing popularity.

Firm Management • Payroll

CPA Practice Advisor is registered with the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) as a sponsor of continuing professional education on the National Registry of CPE Sponsors.

© 2024 Firmworks, LLC. All rights reserved