What peers, clients and friends say about Brent:

Brent is an endless source of giving. From his work with the Illinois CPA Society's Student Outreach Task Force to his dedication to the National Association of Black Accountants, Brent gives of himself as a role model generously. His firm, Washington, Pittman and McKeever, recently launched the Mary T. Washington program to assist African American students in their goal to become a CPA. He is very dedicated and a team player who is willing to make the sacrifices necessary to ensure the achievement of project objectives.

What technology or business process does Brent see affecting the tax and accounting profession in the next five years?

"The technology I see affecting the tax and accounting profession in the next five years is wireless instant networking. This technology will provide accountants with the ability to share data instantly via laptops, PDAs, or other wireless devices, without the need for access to central servers. As an auditor, I welcome the enormous scales of efficiency such technology will bring with respect to synchronizing data between myself and the staff during engagements."
