What peers, clients and friends say about Brian:

Brian approaches everything he does with the big picture in view. His experience in accounting, auditing, consulting, standards development and technical technology training has helped him to develop a skill set that allows him to approach finding solutions from a unique and creative perspective. He is a devout proponent of staying abreast of current technology, industry trends, and regulatory changes. People and companies that do this and then take the next step to update their policies and procedures and provide quality training for their staff will find themselves delivering quality products and services to their clients and will be among the most successful in their field and/or industry.

What technology or business process does Brian see affecting the tax and accounting profession in the next five years?

“Workflow. Accounting professionals are experiencing huge returns on their investment in paperless technologies — paperless audit and document management software, scanning, dual monitors, etc. The next logical step in the progression and what is being expected from vendors is advanced solutions to manage the workflow of all bookkeeping, tax, audit and consulting engagements.
