What peers, clients and friends say about Joe:

Joe is very outgoing and gets to know people quickly. For an accountant, he is not very left brained; he is actually quite artistic in many of his endeavors. His personal interests include music, literature, and an affinity for philosophical and theological study.

What technology or business process does Joe see affecting the tax and accounting profession in the next five years?

“The political buzz is about income tax reform, but it has been so for decades, in varying degrees. If by some real stretch congress passes a national sales tax, I see huge changes for the accounting industry. In the positive sense, I see a consistent and continual increase in accounting technology. More small businesses are looking to bring their bookkeeping in-house and maintain the books real time. Many larger businesses are beginning to consider QuickBooks Enterprise Solutions as a viable option for them, bringing good clients from two different demographical areas.”
