President & CEO, Xcentric, LLC, Alpharetta, GA

Aug. 29, 2006

Education – BS Information Technology, Texas Wesleyan University

Family – Wife Amy

Hobbies & Interests – Flying, hiking, soccer and travel.

Professional Affiliations – Association for Accounting Administration; tech. speaker for McGladray & Georgia Society of CPAs.

What peers, clients and friends say about Trey:

Trey's interest in developing technologies that aid accountants has driven him in his professional interests, while his high integrity and willingness to put others before himself are evident in all of his activities. He is a humble, mentoring leader, loves life and loves serving people, and is excited about how technology can impact business.

What technology or business process does Trey see affecting the tax and accounting profession in the next five years?

“Total network outsourcing will allow CPA firms to leverage technology in ever increasing ways. No longer will they need to manage, support or maintain their own network infrastructure. These firms will leverage Fortune 500

technologies

and staff while enjoying significant reductions in annual IT expenditures. Squarely aimed at CPAs, total network outsourcing is a rapidly growing market intended to allow firms increased focus on their core competencies and to better serve their clients and business strategies.”
