Social media websites like Facebook, Twitter and LinkedIn have been around for several years now, and we've covered the subject as it relates to professional tax and accounting firms several times.

But a recent Forbes article (10 Myths about Social Networking for Small Business) reminded me that even when faced with sound logic, adaptation can be a burden. I've put the challenges of accepting new technology and social media into a context similar to the 5 Stages of Grief (it seemed appropriate):
