Hall of fame at dinner and reception at the second annual Thought Leader Symposium.

Taija Sparkman • Feb. 17, 2012

What do the Beach Boys and Ernst & Young have in common? Rick Richardson, CPA.CITP, of course. Richardson worked for both before founding Richardson Media and Technologies and being inducted into the Accounting Hall of Fame on Sunday night.

Today, Richardson is known for his extensive accounting career and the strides he has made in the profession, but he also has a passion for music, dating back to high school. It is that passion for music which led him to the Beach Boys and, in 1964, he played drums for the recording of “Fun, Fun, Fun” and California Girls.”

Naming Richardson as the most recent addition to the Accounting Hall of Fame, not only highlighted the second annual CPA Practice Advisor Thought Leader Symposium, but it was also a “fun, fun, fun” way to kick off the first night of the three-day conference.

“Being a part of the 25 Thought Leaders in the profession was, in itself, such an honor for me and now to be named to the Hall of Fame by my peers – I’m thrilled and humbled,” said Richardson. “I hope I can continue doing what I’ve done my whole career to continue to earn such an award.”

Richardson’s extensive career in the accounting profession played a major part in the selection process. In addition to being the CEO and founder of Richardson Media and Technologies, he also travels as a speaker, forecasting technology trends to thousands of professionals, community leaders, educators and students.

“Rick Richardson has been an accounting professional for a long time, as well as an

Applause and congratulations rang out around the room from the other Thought Leaders when Root made the announcement at a reception held Sunday night at the Omni Mandalay Bay hotel in Dallas, Texas.

“Rick is one of the most insightful CPAs on technology and is certainly deserving of this honor,” said Randy Johnston, Executive Vice President of NMGI & K2 Enterprises. Johnston and Gregory L. Lafollette, CPA.CITP, were inducted as the first two members of CPA Practice Advisor's Accounting Hall of Fame.
