

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

Isaac M. O'Bannon • Jun. 15, 2012

Kelly Phillips Erb (a widely-published tax attorney known on Twitter as @taxgirl), shares some of her experience from this week's AICPA Tech+ conference in Las Vegas (mostly CPAs), which also included the Association for Accounting Marketing's conference.

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

Kelly's post today on Forbes.com explains it all quite well:

This was my first trip to Vegas and I had a great time. The conference was terrific, I met lots of wonderful folks and I'm fairly certain that I did just about everything in Vegas that I could legally do. It was loads of fun. It was also very expensive.

But it was a business conference, right? So shouldn't it all be deductible? Yes, these are the kind of things that tax professionals discuss at 3:00 a.m. over a martini or two. And, as then, I have some answers. Only this time, nobody has to jot them down on a cocktail napkin.

You can read Kelly's full article at:

www.forbes.com/sites/kellyphillipserb/2012/06/13/what-happens-in-vegas-traveling-for-business

CPA Practice Advisor is registered with the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) as a sponsor of continuing professional education on the National Registry of CPE Sponsors.

© 2024 Firmworks, LLC. All rights reserved