Benefits Professionals

Nov. 11, 2013

Thomson Reuters has released a new Affordable Care Act (ACA) analysis tool for tax and employee benefits professionals. The Web-based ACA Decision Support Tool, available on Thomson Reuters Checkpoint online platform, produces tailored analyses of the Act's impact on a business — including scenario planning and potential strategies to optimize employer-provided health benefits and minimize taxes and penalties.

“The Affordable Care Act presents significant challenges for advisors who help businesses plan for and comply with the act's provisions, including the employer shared responsibility mandate and ongoing IRS reporting requirements,” said Jim Reeves, vice president for the professional tax market at Thomson Reuters. “With more than 20,000 pages of regulations, the Act is extremely complex. Our ACA Decision Support Tool cuts through the complexity and helps employers make well-informed decisions.”

The tool allows users to input employer data to:

- Enable employers and their advisors to better understand the relevant requirements of the Act, remain compliant, minimize taxes, and avoid penalties.
- Identify whether an employer is an “applicable large employer” subject to employer shared responsibility (play or pay) requirements.
- Determine the impact of shared responsibility rules over multiple years.
- Determine the after-tax cost of maintaining existing health care coverage under the Act as well as the cost of dropping coverage entirely and adjusting compensation.

- Assess the impact of adding or dropping employees or converting employees from
