Roger CPA Review has launched significant updates to its Interactive Practice Questions (IPQ) and CPA Exam Simulation software system. The team of educators and eLearning software developers have designed the system based on the upcoming 2017 CPA Exam changes, student feedback, and extensive research on how students retain and apply information.

The software upgrade enables maximum user control with higher level diagnostic reporting, customizable quizzes and full CPA Exam simulations.

The upgraded exam practice questions software includes enhanced diagnostic reporting to improve students' study efficiency. The increased analytics allow students to gauge themselves on two critical factors: progression and competency.

practice sessions. Students can now review, sort, and quiz themselves based on new parameters, including unanswered questions, questions they have previously answered correctly and/or incorrectly, and questions they have flagged or noted for further review.

The software furthermore provides a crucial asset with the CPA Exam Simulator. Here students have access to an unlimited amount of full-length practice exams in which they can hone their test taking strategy, time management, and self-discipline under exam-like conditions, while continuing to expose themselves to the material.

Finally, a new review mode allows students to review previously answered questions in a non-test environment to analyze their answer responses and fully understand the material tested. From here students have the ability to retake practice exams, quizzes, or build new quizzes based on their specifications.

The IPQ software contains over 5,000 Multiple Choice Questions and Task-based Simulations, with full explanations as to why each answer option is correct, or incorrect, so that students fully comprehend the material. As with all Roger CPA Review preparation tools, the IPQ is cloud-based and mobile compatible, offering accessibility and convenience.
