

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us pads, but tampons and sanitary pads are subject to sales tax.

Mar. 14, 2016

The tampon tax, by the numbers

$20 MILLION

Women in California pay an average of $20 million in taxes on tampons and sanitary napkins annually.

$7

Average amount a woman spends per month on feminine hygiene products

40 years

Average number of years a woman will have her period

$3,360

Estimated, average amount a woman will spend on feminine hygiene products in her lifetime

Source: The Office of Assemblymember Cristina Garcia

The women's movement is taking an unexpected turn in some parts of the country.

According to reports from the New York Daily News, CNN and other media sources, five female Manhattan dwellers have launched a class action lawsuit against the taxing authority of New York. The plaintiffs—Margo Seibert, Jennifer Moore, Catherine O'Neil, Natalie Brasington and Taja-Nia Henderson—allege that the state discriminates against females by taxing certain items used only by women. Court

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

The lawsuit names the Department of Taxation and Finance as defendant. “The department’s double standard for men and women finds no support in the tax law and serves no purpose other than to discriminate,” the plaintiffs say. “It is . . . undisputable that tampons and sanitary pads serve multiple medical purposes. They are not luxury items, but a necessity for women’s health.”

The average woman spends at least $70 per year on tampons and pads, resulting in sales taxes of $14 million for the Empire State each year. Assemblywoman Linda Rosenthal (D-Manhattan) recently introduced legislation that would exempt those products from the 4 percent sales tax and Governor Cuomo (D-NY) has already announced he’s on board.

Most states impose sales taxes that apply to feminine hygiene products. Currently, only five states have passed laws specifically exempting tampons from sales tax – Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

However, a bill in California exempting tampons and sanitary pads from state sales tax was recently endorsed by the board in charge of administering the tax. Several other states – including Utah and Virginia — have introduced similar bills. But detractors point out that a wide variety of other personal hygiene products – including soap and shampoo – aren’t exempt from sales tax either. If new exemptions are carved out, the states will have to find other ways of dredging up more tax revenue.

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us