MOBILE SALES TAX

In addition to Stripe Connect, which provides everything marketplaces and platforms need to get users paid, Avalara will also integrate with Stripe Relay, which enables customers to buy merchants' products directly within other mobile apps.

Jun. 26, 2016

Avalara, Inc., a provider of tax compliance automation for business, has expanded its integrations with Stripe, the leading payments infrastructure for the Internet.

In addition to Stripe Connect, which provides everything marketplaces and platforms need to get users paid, Avalara will also integrate with Stripe Relay, which enables customers to buy merchants' products directly within other mobile apps.

Avalara's mission is to be a part of every transaction in the world, in order to address tax compliance challenges faced by businesses of all sizes. To that end, the company is focused on connecting with leading applications for e-commerce, mobile commerce, ERP, POS/MPOS and accounting software. In addition to Stripe, Avalara has partnerships with more than 500 transaction software providers; more than 20,000 customers use Avalara to automate their transactional tax compliance.

"Companies that use Stripe expect to do business in real-time, which is why AvaTax enables automated sales tax calculation in the real-time, 'magic moment' of commerce," said Avalara co-founder and CEO Scott McFarlane. "Twelve months into our partnership, we're delighted to expand it and look forward to growing our mutual customer base with Stripe."
