CertCapture

Aug. 03, 2016

Tax compliance automation provider Avalara, Inc. has added new features to its CertCapture solution, enabling businesses to securely capture, manage, and analyze tax compliance documents in real-time. These new features include:

- A simplified user interface (UI), for use in point-of-sale systems, which was designed with feedback from one of the top “big box” home improvement chain retailers (and Avalara customer). CertCapture’s new UI helps to simplify the real-time task of handling a tax-exempt sales transaction.
- Single sign-on to exemption certificate management, to simplify security for organizations with many salespeople or other employees who need to look up customer exemption status
- New graphical reporting capabilities to enable companies to identify data trends, better manage exemption certificates and other compliance documents, and sync with business needs

“Commerce happens in real-time and we want to empower clients to manage more of their tax compliance in real-time,” said Matt Tormollen, executive vice president and general manager at Avalara. “CertCapture’s new features simplify the ever-increasing burden of tax compliance while enabling customers to run their businesses more efficiently and with the highest level of security.”

Businesses of all sizes are in a constant struggle to comply with perpetually changing tax laws and regulations imposed by various government agencies. CertCapture’s easy-to-integrate modules for point-of-sale and eCommerce environments help businesses satisfy these requirements greater efficiency. By simplifying and extending the reach of Avalara’s CertCapture solution right to the point of purchase, customers can be confident that their businesses are compliant.

CertCapture stores tax compliance documents in a secure, central cloud repository
