Vertex tax technology to help companies more effectively address their indirect tax reporting and operations, including global tax compliance requirements.

Aug. 19, 2016

The U.S. audit, tax, and advisory firm KPMG has partnered with Vertex Inc., a provider of corporate tax software and services, to offer companies an approach to their management of global indirect tax compliance that can help reduce costs and tax audit risk.

“Today’s tax leaders operate in a rapidly changing environment, with increased oversight from global regulators, heightened reporting and compliance requirements,” said Brian Stromen, KPMG’s U.S. leader for State and Local Tax. “We’ve developed a solution with Vertex that can enable tax departments to operate with greater efficiency, speed, accuracy, and strategic impact as they manage their indirect tax exposures around the world.”

“Because tax is routinely among the largest items on a company’s financial statement, there is ever-increasing interest among tax leaders and their financial peers to elevate the business value for tax,” said Jack Ferraioli, executive vice president at Vertex. “Working with KPMG, we can help business leaders focus on activities that result in meaningful, measureable financial benefits to their global organizations.”

The alliance combines KPMG’s tax services and global indirect tax experience with Vertex tax technology to help companies more effectively address their indirect tax reporting and operations, including global tax compliance requirements.

In addition, KPMG and Vertex can help clients manage tax risk and exposure to audit adjustments, potential indirect tax fraud and revenue loss, and increase the
