

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us practitioners. The one-and-done nature of many types of valuations means that repeat business with the same client isn't as common as it is for some other professional ...

Oct. 27, 2016

Continuing to grow the business valuation practice is an ongoing concern for many practitioners. The one-and-done nature of many types of valuations means that repeat business with the same client isn't as common as it is for some other professional services, so feeding the pipeline is a continuous process. In addition, the purchase process for valuations can take longer and be more complicated, given that prospective clients might have never had a valuation before or may not fully understand what one involves.

The bottom line is that managing your valuation practice for growth means it is vital to target your efforts to reach new clients, and then go after those prospects efficiently.

A recent study by Hinge Research Institute in association with the National Association of Certified Valuators and Analysts offered several ideas for growing your valuation practice. The survey identified some general marketing-related guidelines

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us studies on your website or marketing materials. It can also mean contributing articles to industry publications or engaging on social media, such as LinkedIn. Some valuation professionals offer programs to help business owners grow the value of their business long before an exit, and that can be an effective way to grow your valuation business.

Develop relationships with other professionals outside your firm. Referrals to valuation practitioners often come from other professional services providers – lawyers, bankers or accounting firms that don't conduct valuations, for example. Some valuation experts teach continuing professional education (CPE) classes or offer to speak at conferences and trade shows of these providers in order to boost their visibility and win clients. A separate study by Hinge found that 30 percent of referrals to professional services firms arose from hearing a speech by the service provider. Another idea is to contact an industry trade association (e.g., construction, manufacturing) and offer to host business owners for an educational session on growing the value of their businesses.

Work on your website. Since many buyers of professional services research providers online, it is vital to have a professional-looking, high-quality website, according to the Hinge and NACVA study. An outdated, bare-bones website can also kill referrals from other professionals looking to connect their clients with valuation practitioners. In addition to having current information about your services and staff qualifications, consider optimizing your website so that it can be found in the search rankings when clients or other professionals are looking for a local valuation firm.

Help others. The Hinge/NACVA survey found that the more referrals you make, the more referrals you are likely to receive, so look for opportunities to refer clients to other professional service providers. "Reciprocity pays," the study said. While average survey participants had received 7 referrals in the previous 6 months,

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

recently developed by Sageworks and Chartwell, that outlines the differences between when a calculation of value is performed and when a full valuation is best.

Technology can also help win the engagement, according to Brickley DeLong partner Thomas E. Vereecke, CPA. He signs in to Sageworks Valuation Solution to help prospective clients understand how valuations work and why the engagement will be billed the way it is, showing them all of the steps that valuation professionals go through in the valuation. "People get a better feel for something they've never had exposure to," Vereecke says. "It's a really nice selling point."

---

Mary Ellen Biery is a research specialist at Sageworks, a financial information company that provides financial analysis and valuation applications to accounting firms.

Accounting

CPA Practice Advisor is registered with the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) as a sponsor of continuing professional education on the National Registry of CPE Sponsors.

© 2024 Firmworks, LLC. All rights reserved