Wim A. Van der Stede, CIMA Professor of Financial Management, Head of Department of Accounting, London School of Economics, presented the award, which includes a $2000 stipend, at the 2017 AAA Management Accounting Section's mid-year meeting in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

“Professor Stikeleather’s study provides organizations with research on how codes of conduct and employee compensation can influence internal whistleblowing,” said Van der Stede. “These insights are crucial to helping management accountants and their organizations put the right controls and incentives in place to drive sustainable success in today’s complex business climate.”

The award was sponsored by the Chartered Global Management Accountant \(CGMA\) designation, which was created in 2012 by the AICPA and CIMA to help people and businesses succeed by producing and recognizing competent and confident management accounting professionals able to steer business and lead their organizations to make better decisions.

The Greatest Potential Impact on Management Accounting Practice Award recognizes academic research considered to most likely have a significant impact on management accounting. Eligible papers must have been published within the previous five years and submitted by the authors, or nominated by peers.
