related website address, referral information, and any related campaign, a plus for small nonprofits. Users can also add payment terms to each customer's account, though there is no option to set up credit limits or other payment options. Finance charges can be added to any customer account, though they have to be added manually to each invoice. Customer order history and payment are easily accessible from the client account or by running the All Transactions report.

Users can easily add a credit to a customer's account using the payment option screen. The credit would be entered as a deposit from a customer, and would remain on the account until it was applied to an open invoice or refunded to the customer. Kashoo handles basic expense entry and does not offer return authorization capability in the system at this time.

Kashoo integrates with business bank accounts, making it easy to quickly record both ACH and other electronic payments. Users can also accept credit card payments, with payments processed through Stripe or BluePay. Invoices can be emailed directly to customers, providing customers with the option to make a payment online. Kashoo automatically notifies users when a payment has been made.

Conveniently, users can enter payment information from the same interface used when adding a new invoice. When entering a payment, users simply click on the Enter Payment option at the top of the screen, choose the correct customer and enter the related payment information, with a list of open invoices displayed to the right of the screen. Any prepayments, credits or overpayments can be applied in the payment screen as well.

Kashoo users can create an activity statement for both customers and suppliers, with two statement options available; an Activity Statement, which displays a record of all activity, including invoices, expenses, credits, and payments, and a Summary Statement, which displays only outstanding invoices or expenses.

Kashoo also offers multi-currency capability, so business owners can create invoices
