April 15 is the deadline for most U.S. taxpayers to file their income tax returns, and most average workers usually get a refund. If you haven't filed yet, you'd better get started. If you're expecting an income tax refund from the IRS, the chart below shows when you are most likely to receive it.

The tax reform law officially kicked in on January 1, 2018, but the taxes you file from January through April 15, 2019 will be the first time most Americans see the actual impact of the tax reform law. And you may have heard that refunds are smaller for per week in their paycheck. Many factors affect your tax rate and refund, so not all working taxpayers will realize the same results.

When Will I Get My 2019 Income Tax Refund?

This is the question you probably came here for. Those with the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) or Child Tax Credit (CTC) may have had their forms delayed, since the IRS pays special attention to these credits, which have been abused in past years. Below is a short

This chart shows an estimated timeline for when a taxpayer is likely to receive their refund. If yours is delayed, use the “Where's My Refund?” tool on the IRS website – Or download the IRS2Go app to check your refund status.

* = IRS may delay tax filing season by one week or more due to changes in tax law. = Returns with EITC or CTC may have refunds delayed until late February to verify credits. = Filing during peak season can result in slightly longer waits.

IMPORTANT: If you file electronically (using an online tax program or preparer), the IRS will notify you of the actual date they “accepted” your return. This is often 1-3 days from the time you actually hit the “file” button, and it is this date that you need to use for the above chart.

Taxpayers who mail their income tax return can expect at least a 3-4 week delay at the front-end of the process, as the return has to be digitized before it can be processed.

Be Safe – Hire a Professional

Taxpayers who use a professional, such as a CPA or EA, can ask that professional for the estimated date of their tax refund, and they can be more confident that their taxes have been properly (and legally) filed.
