Georgia taxpayers and businesses have a new way to connect with CPAs. CPAs are charged with protecting and promoting the public interest, most notably with regard to financial reporting, tax and audit. The Georgia Society of CPAs (GSCPA) has a free resource to assist Georgians in finding a CPA that meets your needs — the CPA Referral Service. The service, which has been in operation since 1998, helps individuals and businesses connect with the top accounting firms in Georgia.

Those searching for a CPA can access the service by visiting GSCPA's website at www.gscpa.org. Within the service, individuals can search for CPA firms by geographic location, client services offered and industries served. The database contains the names of over 300 accounting firms throughout the state and more are being added each day.

“GSCPA’s CPA Referral Service provides a valuable connection between the public and Georgia CPAs. Today individuals are turning to CPAs for more than just tax advice. As trusted advisers, CPAs provide tax, financial and estate planning services, investment advice and more,” GSCPA CEO Boyd Search said.

GSCPA is committed to ensuring that Georgia citizens and businesses have access to
