Avalara, Inc. has added a new artificial intelligence (AI)-based tax classification tool that allows Avalara AvaTax users to quickly and efficiently classify their products or services to aid in taxability determinations for their U.S. domestic product catalogs. Avalara's AI-enabled tax classification tool reduces the time spent classifying products and taxability to increase return on investment for users. Avalara is a provider of cloud-based tax compliance automation for businesses of all sizes.

Determining taxability poses challenges for businesses

There are more than 13,000 tax jurisdictions in the U.S. alone, and many have their sales of cold food products and hot drinks are taxable.

Ensuring products are accurately classified is critical to achieving tax compliance and makes certain businesses aren't over- or undercharging taxes on transactions.

Gain control of your tax determinations with Avalara

Avalara's AI-driven tool helps users determine the right tax code in AvaTax for a product or service by using simple search terms and an easy, interactive Q&A experience. This enables businesses to:

- Improve accuracy of tax classification across channels. Users can answer contextual questions to easily determine the correct tax codes for products, which reduces confusion and inaccuracy throughout the classification process.
- Decrease turnaround time for product classification. AI streamlines the product classification process, reducing the time needed to consult human tax experts. If a customer still needs support, Avalara's GoLive and customer support teams are trained to leverage the new tool to streamline product classification for customers.

"The accurate classification of products and services has always been a bottleneck for customers in their tax compliance journey," said Sanjay Parthasarathy, chief product officer at Avalara. "By harnessing the power of AI and machine learning, we have not only accelerated the classification process by providing a solution that helps users arrive at the right tax classification quickly and efficiently without being a tax expert, but we have also made it more accurate."
