

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

WEEKS

McConnell said he's "pretty sure" that a bill will come together in the next couple of weeks. He said it will be crafted in his office with consultation from the administration and then negotiated with Democrats, who endorsed a ...

Jul. 06, 2020

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell predicted Congress will pass one final coronavirus rescue package later this month and appealed to everyone in public life to urge people to wear masks to control the spread.

"This is not over. We are seeing a resurgence in a lot of states," McConnell said at one of three press conferences he held Monday in Kentucky. "I think the country needs one last boost."

McConnell said he's "pretty sure" that a bill will come together in the next couple of

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

McConnell reiterated his insistence that the bill must include liability protections for businesses, schools and others that reopen. He said more broadly that he was focused on measures that would help reopen schools, and boost jobs and health care.

That could include additional payments to individuals, McConnell said. He added that the people hit the hardest make about $40,000 or less and work in the hospitality industry.

He said lawmakers will be looking at additional state and local aid, but cautioned that the soaring federal debt is a reason the next bill must be the last one.

On masks and the virus generally, McConnell's tone differed sharply from President Donald Trump, who has avoided wearing masks in public and has repeatedly tried to minimize the pandemic.

"Look, the single most important thing each of us can do to not only help ourselves but protect our friends and neighbors and everyone around us is not complicated — to wear a mask," McConnell said. "It ain't confusing. It's really simple."

While McConnell didn't back a national mask mandate, he said everyone in public life should set an example by wearing masks and urging people to wear them.

"We all need to echo that all across the commonwealth and all across the country," he said.

McConnell blamed soaring case counts on people not taking the virus seriously enough.

"Clearly a lot of people thought when we started opening up the economy again, let the good times roll," he said. Still, he added, "We can't shut the economy down again."

White House Press Secretary Kayleigh McEnany was asked at her Monday press

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

Asked about his face-off in November's election against Democrat Amy McGrath, McConnell noted he is the only congressional leader not from California or New York and said "the fundamental question" for voters is whether they want a senator who will help Kentucky "punch above its weight" or one whose first vote "will be to make Chuck Schumer majority leader."

=====

©2020 Bloomberg News

Visit Bloomberg News at www.bloomberg.com

Distributed by Tribune Content Agency, LLC.

Income Tax • IRS • Small Business

CPA Practice Advisor is registered with the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) as a sponsor of continuing professional education on the National Registry of CPE Sponsors.

© 2024 Firmworks, LLC. All rights reserved