innovation and corporate responsibility emblematic of EisnerAmper.”

“In my 30 years in the profession, I’ve seen hundreds of business headquarters of all types, but I’ve never seen one like this,” commented EisnerAmper COO and co-project lead Robert Levine. “It’s a forward-thinking, ‘workplace for your day’ facility that has a real element of fun to it. And, best of all, the design reflects what our people told us was most important to them.”

Added Nicholas Tsafos, Partner-in-Charge of the NYC office and co-project lead: “The new space has a great balance to it. It has this industrious look where you get the sense that significant work is being done, but there’s a creative harmony you can also feel. This will be a wonderful forum in which to attract and retain the best and brightest talent.”

“We wanted a future-driven design that pushed the envelope, something that conveys where EisnerAmper is and its countless possibilities” said Weinstein. “And I think we nailed it. From an organizational culture standpoint, it’s a really great place to reconnect with co-workers, clients and colleagues as we strategically return to the office.”
