between accounting methods. The Dual-Ledger Accounting switch can be set per user in the software, and each accounting method can be easily viewed by toggling a switch. Because the patented Dual-Ledger Accounting creates transactions in each accounting method, users can easily change their accounting method in the future without the need for adjusting entries.

“Previous patents have outlined how to programmatically convert from one accounting method to the other. But, that takes additional processing and may make it hard to switch back. Our approach takes the processing hit upfront. After that, switching accounting methods is just a viewing preference and there's no need for either manual or computational adjusting entries,” said Asher McCune, Senior Solutions Architect.

With the single goal in mind to make Patriot's accounting software powerful enough for accountants and easy enough for small business owners, the Dual-Ledger Accounting concept was developed by Asher McCune, Jackie White, and Michael Streb.

Patriot plans to add more software features and improvements in the future to ensure customers continue to receive an exceptional user experience.
