welcome them and the entire Friedman team to Marcum.”

“Our merger with Marcum will accelerate and expand our ability to offer clients the increasingly specialized services and deep industry insights they need. One of the great things about Marcum is that they are a truly entrepreneurial firm, which means they are constantly evolving their best practices as clients’ needs and market forces change, and optimizing career opportunities for their professionals. It’s a very dynamic environment, and one in which our team and our clients will thrive,” Berk said.

“Friedman and Marcum both started out from very modest roots and understand the rigors of growing in a fast-paced, challenging environment. This merger is a true meeting of the minds, and the opportunity to collaborate is a momentous step towards the future,” Greenberg said. In addition to her Marcum partnership responsibilities, Greenberg will also continue to serve as president of DFK International, one of three global associations of independent accounting and advisory firms of which Marcum is a member.

Allan D. Koltin, CEO of Koltin Consulting Group, who advised both firms on the combination, commented, “Mergers of this size and stature are rare in the accounting profession because so many things have to line up. In this deal, Friedman and Marcum both saw the strategic and cultural fit on Day One. What was amazing throughout the process was how compatible the firms were and how often they recognized a best practice in each other that will become the standard for the merged operation.”
