

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us permission of taxpayers.

Nov. 22, 2022

By Matthew Medsger, Boston Herald (TNS)

A pair of U.S. Senators representing New England states want the IRS to investigate after they say tax processing software company TurboTax has been sending refunds to bank accounts opened without the permission of taxpayers.

“Numerous taxpayers have reported that they cannot access their tax refunds due to Intuit’s partnership with Green Dot Bank,” Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren and New Hampshire Sen. Jeanne Shaheen said in a joint letter to Consumer Financial

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us taxpayer's own banking institution has no record of it and they have no existing banking relationship with Green Dot Bank," they wrote.

The senators say some taxpayers who chose to pay for their TurboTax service with funds from their tax return cannot get to the remainder of their refunds and that, though there should be a mechanism to address the issue, some people are still without their cash despite the intervention of senate staffers.

"When such an event occurs, IRS technical advisors may then send the bank a formal request using Fiscal Service Form 150.1, but as the Senators state in their letter, their staff assisting impacted constituents have found the IRS cannot compel Green Dot Bank to respond to their request, leaving the taxpayer in the dark and unable to obtain any information about next steps," Shaheen's office said in a release along with the letter.

A solution, the senators wrote, would be for the IRS to simply implement their own tax filing software system and tell people how much they should pay.

"We urge the IRS to develop its own simple, free filing service that taxpayers can use if they prefer not to have their refunds diminished by fees, their tax data shared with private companies, and their money whisked into banks they themselves did not choose," lawmakers wrote.

Congress rejected a 2007 proposal to direct the IRS to create its own free tax filing system. Later, in 2019, lawmakers attempted to make a free-filing system illegal and then backed off following public backlash over enshrining for-cost tax preparation into law.

Rick Heineman, a spokesperson for Intuit, told the Herald late Monday that the company works with customers and tax officials directly to see to any concerns.

“We work closely with our customers, banking partners, and the IRS to help resolve

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us receiving their refund from the IRS, including when the IRS makes an adjustment to a tax return. Refund delays can also occur if a filer's bank information is inaccurate or an account is no longer active,” he said.

©2022 MediaNews Group Inc. Visit at bostonherald.com. Distributed by Tribune Content Agency LLC.

IRS • Taxes • Technology

CPA Practice Advisor is registered with the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) as a sponsor of continuing professional education on the National Registry of CPE Sponsors.

© 2024 Firmworks, LLC. All rights reserved