While you focus on your business, the folks at Avalara stay on top of legislative and policy changes that can affect your tax compliance.

Nuts and bolts

Closing the door on transaction thresholds? How do you know if your business is required to register for sales tax in another state? In many states, all it takes is meeting a transaction threshold. If Senate Bill 30 is enacted, South Dakota may join the eight states that have eliminated economic nexus transaction thresholds (along with the 13 states that never created one to begin with). Learn more about state

some states have multiple filing schedules, some call for special reporting requirements, and some allow county governments to administer local taxes on top of state tax. Here are the top 10 tricky states when it comes to sales tax filing and remittance.

Check out the state of sales tax for a roundup of governor-proposed sales tax changes, potential tax cuts or hikes across a number of states, and taxation trends we have our eyes on this year.

Do you owe taxes in The Last Frontier? Nearly 50 cities and boroughs in Alaska tax remote sales or direct-to-consumer alcohol shipments. If your business has met the economic nexus threshold but has not yet registered with the Alaska Remote Seller Sales Tax Commission, participation in Alaska's new voluntary disclosure program might be for you.

Experiencing exemption apprehension? Exemption certificate management is tricky. Each state has its own rules, filing deadlines, and certificates to keep track of the sales and purchasers that are exempt from sales tax. Avalara produces a state-by-state guide that can help.

What's in a name? If you've done business in New Mexico, you may be familiar with the state's gross receipts tax. But if House Bill 323 is passed, the Land of Enchantment might start calling it a sales and use tax. The tax itself won't change much, but it might be easier for out-of-state sellers to understand.

Solving resale certificate complications. If you buy goods specifically to resell them, you've probably had to fill out a resale certificate. Similarly, if your business sells goods to be resold, you'll have to collect and manage the certificates from your customers. It sounds straightforward, but different state requirements can make certificate management complicated. Here's our state-by-state guide to getting it
