

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us aren't burdened with the 1099-K form.

Mar. 16, 2023

By Kelley R. Taylor, Kiplinger Consumer News Service (TNS)

Online shopping sites like Etsy, and eBay, and payment network PayPal, among other companies, want Congress to change the new $600 reporting threshold for IRS Form 1099-K. The rule which currently applies for 2023, affects millions of people who sell on sites like Airbnb, and Poshmark, and get paid through third-party networks like PayPal, Square and CashApp.

Previously to receive a 1099-K, you had to have at least 200 third-party payment network transactions totalling more than $20,000 in gross payments. Now, in 2023, a single transaction on a payment network of just $600 can trigger a 1099-K. Some

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

Is the IRS unfairly targeting casual sellers?

PayPal, eBay, and Etsy are among several members of the 1099-K Fairness Coalition that want Congress to ensure that casual online sellers aren't burdened with the IRS 1099-K form. The organization cites a 2022 national survey of sellers where:

- 70% of respondents said they would be deterred from selling online because of the $600 IRS 1099-K reporting requirement.
- 85% percent of those surveyed didn't think that the IRS should be "targeting people who only occasionally sell online," according to the survey.

Members of the Coalition for 1099-K Fairness include: Airbnb, Bikelist, eBay, Eventbrite, Block Inc. (for Square and CashApp), ETA, Etsy, Goldin, Kidizen, Mercari, Noihsaf Bazaar, OfferUp, PayPal, Poshmark Inc., Reverb, Rover, Sports Fan Coalition, StubHub, TechNet and Tradesy.

According to the coalition, many of the transactions that casual sellers have "involve the sale of used goods that do not create any tax liability." (Some of those goods are often sold for less than what the seller initially paid.) The organization says on its website that the new IRS $600 rule would disproportionately burden some taxpayers, who could be at risk of over-reporting their income or "forced to hire a tax professional" to ensure compliance with the reporting requirement.

The coalition also points out that economic hardship is another factor for nearly 40% of online sellers. The vast majority (nearly 75%) said that they sell online to help pay for necessary personal expenses.

1099-K: What could Congress do?

Hello. It looks like you're using an ad blocker that may prevent our website from working properly. To receive the best experience possible, please make sure any blockers are switched off and refresh the page.

If you have any questions or need help you can email us

- The legislation would repeal the IRS 1099-K $600 rule and restore the previous $20,000/200 transaction threshold.
- It's unclear right now what will happen with the legislation, which is similar to proposals that circulated in Congress last year but failed to gain enough support to pass.

For now? The $600 1099-K reporting rule doesn't apply for the current 2022 tax filing season. But keep in mind that the IRS expects you to report all taxable income on your federal return, whether you receive a 1099-K or not.

All contents copyright 2023 The Kiplinger Washington Editors Inc. Distributed by Tribune Content Agency LLC

IRS • Small Business • Taxes

CPA Practice Advisor is registered with the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy (NASBA) as a sponsor of continuing professional education on the National Registry of CPE Sponsors.

© 2024 Firmworks, LLC. All rights reserved