Avalara, Inc., a provider of cloud-based tax compliance automation for businesses of all sizes, has been chosen by the state of Colorado, and its Avalara Tax Research system will provide the state's tax rates and rules to its more than 300 sales tax jurisdictions. With Avalara, Colorado delivers access to current tax rates and rules with easy-to-use online tools for residents and businesses selling goods and services in the state.

Because Colorado is a “home-rule” state for sales tax, local governments like cities and counties can administer and establish local sales tax rates and rules. The breadth of tax jurisdictions, rates, and rules can create challenges for businesses when

Maps, Avalara Tax Research compares addresses with tax boundary information, including statutory regulations and local ordinances, to reduce variability between different jurisdictional boundary levels and increase visibility into other applicable taxes and fees.

With Avalara Tax Research, Colorado jurisdictions can better communicate with one another on information related to boundaries, rates, rules, and traceability. Additionally, the unified, consistent portal for all tax information enables Colorado to easily keep track of ordinances, rules, taxability information, and proposed tax changes in an online library of historical information.

“As more governments embrace digital transformation to improve the taxpayer experience, leveraging technology that provides easy access to tax information is a key step to modernization,” said Jayme Fishman, EVP and GM of Indirect Tax at Avalara. “Using the best in artificial intelligence, automation, and a team of tax experts, Avalara’s best-in-class solutions and database for tax compliance rates and rules help increase the accuracy and timely validation of tax data for businesses and governments alike.”

Last month, Avalara announced its work with the state of Missouri to power the state’s publicly available online sales and use tax rate map.
