EDGE in Teaching Awards

Interested candidates can apply for two EDGE in Teaching Awards, both of which recognize the outstanding contributions of accounting faculty who produce leading-edge teaching resources to their students:

- Bea Sanders/AICPA & CIMA EDGE in Teaching Award in an Introductory Level Course

The intent of this award is to recognize exceptional teaching in introductory accounting courses, enhancing the attractiveness of the major.

- George Krull/Grant Thornton EDGE in Teaching Award in a Junior- or Senior-Level Course

The intent of this award is to both recognize and disseminate successful leading-edge practices in the teaching of junior- or senior-level accounting courses that continue to enhance accounting majors' interest in accounting and to encourage pursuing the CPA profession as a career.

“Winning this award was an honor,” said Holly Hawk, PhD, CPA, CGMA, clinical assistant professor at Clemson University, and winner of the 2023 George Krull/Grant Thornton Edge in Teaching Award for her senior-level internal audit IT tests project. “My goal has always been to get students excited about accounting, while preparing them to the best of my ability to be the best accountants they can be. And in turn I get excited seeing them build knowledge in different areas simultaneously, then applying that knowledge in the classroom successfully.”

Detailed criteria for the awards can be found at the links above. An entrant may be an individual or group of individuals, and faculty members may self-nominate. The teaching practice may not be a commercial product for which the faculty member has a financial interest.
