“The Botkeeper Infinite technology is all about adapting to the ever-evolving needs of accounting firms and their business clients and ensuring they always receive the best-suited solutions,” Botkeeper CEO Enrico Palmerino said in a statement. “Firms will see a massive reduction of human error, superior reporting, as well as real-time data entry available 24/7. Firms can easily onboard and deploy a new client in a matter of minutes and will find they can reduce their bookkeeping costs by 30 to 50%.”

At the heart of Botkeeper Infinite is AutoPush, Botkeeper’s AI/machine learning technology. According to Botkeeper, AutoPush has been trained on tens of thousands of financial transactions and continues to learn categorizations particular to each individual business accurately and with the capacity to improve over time.

In addition, Botkeeper Infinite introduces the “Activity Hub” module—offering a centralized space within the platform for all comments, feedback, and interactions—and “Bot Review,” which automates searching through the general ledger to find variances and exceptions. Soon after its initial launch, Botkeeper Infinite will also offer three new modules to automate reconciliations, provide plain-English financial analysis for advisory, and automate amortization schedules and loans in real time, syncing directly with the general ledger, the company said.

Available at just $69 per client for the tech-only option, Botkeeper calls Botkeeper Infinite “an affordable solution for fast, accurate bookkeeping, and clean financials every month.”

“If you’re wondering how all of this is a departure from the Botkeeper of old, we understand. Botkeeper remains dedicated as ever to automating the bookkeeping process to get accountants out of the proverbial weeds,” the company said in a blog about Botkeeper Infinite. “But Botkeeper Infinite grants firms unparalleled autonomy, allowing them to design their client journey the way they see fit: choose
